INTERNATIONAL CONNECTIONS

From its reputable curriculum, which examines the globalization of law practice, to study abroad opportunities, the College of Law prepares its students for work in a world where connections don't stop at borders. The fall issue of Tennessee Law will profile faculty and alumni whose influences are felt from Tennessee to Thailand.

THANK YOU TO DONORS

UT College of Law would like to thank all the individuals, law firms, corporations, foundations, and organizations that support the college. We feel privileged to have the support of not only our alumni, but also a variety of entities that recognize the programs and value the mission of the college. All of the individuals and organizations that have made a gift to the UT College of Law in 2009 are available online. Thank you again for all of your support.

Justice Clarence Thomas To Visit UT Knoxville

-Kristi Hintz

Friday, September 17

Alumni Reception with Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas
Reception from 4:30 - 6 p.m. is open to all UT Law alumni.

Please RSVP to Alexis Bell by September 10 at via email or 865-974-6691

He spent the first few years of his life living in poverty, was the only African-American person at his high school, and is a descendant of American slaves. Clarence Thomas, only the second African-American to serve as an associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, will visit the University of Tennessee College of Law this fall. His lecture is by invitation only but alumni may attend a reception with the justice on Friday, Sept. 17.

Thomas' journey to the nation's capitol began in a small, predominantly African-American town called Pin Point, outside of Savannah, Georgia. Eventually moving to Savannah, where he was raised by his grandparents, Thomas' environment centered around work, education, and faith. He was the first person in his family to graduate from high school and followed that by enrolling in seminary.

Known to call himself the "son of his grandfather," Thomas' religious upbringing and the social conditions he was exposed to throughout his youth undoubtedly influenced the Supreme Court justice he has become.

Although Immaculate Conception Seminary was fairly isolated in northwest Missouri, Thomas was not isolated from how society was changing in the late 1960s. On April 4, 1968, Martin Luther King Jr. was assassinated, and Thomas' classmate's celebration of King's death was the final straw that crushed his doubts about his career choice. He left seminary to attend College of the Holy Cross in Massachusetts with the help of the Martin Luther King scholarship fund. He graduated cum laude on June 4 and attended Yale School of Law the following fall.

Thomas' legal career began in Missouri in the mid-70s when he became the assistant attorney general of Missouri under then-State Attorney General John Danforth. He was the first African-American attorney to work for that office. He argued his first case three days after passing the bar exam on Sept. 14, 1974.

In 1977 Thomas moved into private-sector law and began working at Monsanto, a St. Louis chemical corporation. Thomas soon became even more concerned with politics and government—an urge that eventually took him to the nation's capitol. He arrived in Washington, D.C., in the summer of 1979 as the legislative assistant to a little-known, first-term Sen. John Danforth.

It was Ronald Reagan's landslide victory in the 1980 presidential election that gave Thomas one of the greatest professional opportunities of his life. He began his rise in American government as the assistant secretary for civil rights in the U.S. Department of Education, a position he held until 1982 when he became chairman of the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, where he stayed until 1990.

At the EEOC, Thomas was head of an agency chiefly responsible for the enforcement of civil rights, an issue at the heart of much of Thomas' work—but he also was at the helm of an organization in complete financial disarray.

By 1988, EEOC's financial accounting systems met the standards of the General Accounting Office for the first time in its 22-year history. From 1982 to 1988, the number of court actions rose from 241 to 555. Once housed in a building in shambles, EEOC was accorded greater respect and moved to offices that were quite lavish by federal standards. Around this time, Thomas became active in the presidential campaign of George H.W. Bush.

A year into the Bush administration, the Judiciary Committee confirmed Thomas as a judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. At 42, he was the youngest judge on the D.C. Circuit and quickly worked his way onto the president's short list for nomination to the Supreme Court. On July 1, 1991, President Bush announced his nomination of Thomas.

Replacing Thurgood Marshall, Thomas took his seat Oct. 23, 1991.

Thomas married Virginia Lamp on May 30, 1987, and has one child, Jamal Adeen by a previous marriage. Together, they are raising his great-nephew, Mark Elliott Martin Jr., who was born in 1991.

At age 62, Thomas is on track to become one of the longest serving Supreme Court Justices in history.

Some of Thomas' most notable cases include:

Hudson v. McMillian (1992): He dissented, arguing that the beating of a Louisiana inmate by three prison guards was not cruel and unusual punishment.

United States v. Fordice (1992): He agreed that Mississippi had not done enough to desegregate its colleges and universities, but added that increased integration could hurt historically black colleges.

Missouri v. Jenkins (1995): The Court overturned a lower court ruling forcing the city of Kansas City, Missouri, to spend more money on their predominantly black school system to attract white suburban children. Thomas filed a separate concurrence where he argued "Racial isolation' itself is not a harm; only state-enforced segregation is," and that integration assumed that blacks could not get ahead on their own.

Printz v. United States (1997): Although the Printz ruling struck down several gun control laws on Commerce Clause grounds, Thomas wrote a separate concurrence holding that the Second Amendment protects an individual's right to bear arms and would have also rendered the laws unconstitutional, independent of Commerce Clause concerns.

Zelman v. Simmons-Harris (2002): Thomas concurred with the majority decision that Ohio's school voucher program does not violate the First Amendment's establishment clause, which prohibits the establishment of a national religion by Congress.

Hamdi v. Rumsfeld (2004): In a lone dissent, Thomas argued that the president has near-unrestricted authority to classify U.S. citizens as enemy combatants during wartime.

Orr Lecture to Feature Brosnahan

-R.G. Smithson

James J. Brosnahan, the attorney who represented the "American Taliban" in the wake of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks will deliver the Wyc and Lyn Orr Distinguished Lecture at the University of Tennessee College of Law on Oct. 6.

The March 2009 issue of the ABA Journal featured Brosnahan as one of the "Lions of the Trial Bar," seven attorneys past 70 years of age who have "tried some of the most important cases of the last 50 years, dazzling juries and swaying judges." The previous three "Lions" to lecture at Tennessee were James Neal of Nashville, Bobby Lee Cook of Summerville, Georgia, and Fred Bartlit Jr. of Chicago and Denver.

Brosnahan, a senior partner with the global law firm of Morrison & Foerster in San Francisco, accepted John Walker Lindh's case in December 2001 after receiving a call from the young man's father. "I told John's parents that I am not a movement lawyer and that I represent individual clients, not movements," he said in the ABA Journal feature profiling the seven "Lions." "I told them if I ever got the feeling that I was being used for the purpose of a movement, that I was off the case."

Immediately after accepting the case, Brosnahan began receiving death threats via telephone calls, e-mails, and letters. He was forced to hire security guards at his home, office, and for traveling to and from court. The National Review labeled him the "American Tali-Lawyer."

Brosnahan argued that Lindh was not a terrorist, but rather a teenager who went to study in Yemen and then agreed to join Afghan forces fighting against the Northern Alliance in that country's civil war. In the end, Brosnahan negotiated an agreement where Lindh pled to lesser charges and received a 20-year sentence.

The lecture begins at noon in Room 132 of the law school. The event is free and open to the public. Brosnahan will lecture from the perspective of a senior lawyer, focusing on future challenges in the law based in part on examples from the past. The lecture will be parts anecdotal, philosophical, and professional.

The Orr lecture series is made possible through the support of the Orrs of Gainesville, Georgia. Wyc Orr, a 1970 UT law alumnus, is a founding partner of the Gainesville firm of Orr Brown Johnson LLP and has been a trial lawyer for almost four decades. He has tried a wide variety of cases, representing both plaintiffs and defendants before juries in 28 counties across Georgia as well as in federal court and courts-martial in West Germany during his days as a U.S. Army JAGC lawyer. Over the past 50 years, Brosnahan has tried more than 140 cases to verdict. He has prosecuted murderers and the secretary of defense, as well as defended the "American Taliban" and the chair of Hewlett-Packard.

Brosnahan's many notable cases include dismissal of all charges against Patricia Dunn (former chairperson of the board of Hewlett Packard Corporation), lead prosecutor in United States v. Caspar Weinberger, successfully defending the City of Oakland and County of Alameda in the Oakland Raiders litigation and representing El Paso Corporation in all its California litigation during the energy crisis.

"Nothing compares to the electricity of an actual trial, and it is magnified when it is a jury trial," Brosnahan told the ABA Journal.

Brosnahan turned 75 in January but says he has no plans to slow his work schedule. Four jury trials and two nonjury trials are on his calendar this year. Brosnahan argues both civil and criminal cases and says his standard for taking a case is very low.

"The emphasis on specialization of practices is not good at all," he says. "I strongly encourage today's young litigators to take on one or two criminal cases every year. It will make your civil trial practice so much better."

A native of Boston, Brosnahan graduated from Boston College and later received the Bachelor of Laws from Harvard University in 1959. His courtroom experience includes high-profile cases involving antitrust and competition law, complex commercial litigation, intellectual property and patent litigation, employment law, product liability, and white-collar criminal defense.

His many awards include induction in the State Bar of California's "Trial Lawyers Hall of Fame," selection by the National Law Journal as one of America's most influential trial attorneys, and the 2007 American Inns of Court Lewis F. Powell Award for Professionalism and Ethics. He serves as Master Advocate of the Board of Trustees of the National Institute for Trial Advocacy. He is the author of the "Trial Handbook for California Lawyers."

Sneak a Peek

-Karen Britton

The class of 2013 will soon be arriving in Knoxville. We're always excited and curious to see exactly who is in the class, and we thought you would be interested in a preview, as well.

At midsummer, our 2010 entering class is slightly enlarged with 170+ students confirming their plans to enroll. Our ideal class size is 150-155. Consistent with the national increase in applications and applicants and despite the signals the job market may send, UT and law schools nationwide had an abundance of qualified candidates from which to choose.

UT's entering class is well balanced with residents and non-residents, women and men. The group offers a wide diversity of age, life and career experience, as well as racial and ethnic diversity. Class members come from 84 undergraduate schools, 23 states, and 6 countries. The academic profile is a median UGPA of 3.60 and LSAT median of nearly 161.

In past years, there has been wait list activity until fees were due and attendance confirmed, which occurs in early August. UT has had no wait list activity so far this year. We have heard that there has been little wait list activity nationwide, but late changes in plans usually occur and seats can still become available.

Students will pay $14,462 (Tennessee residents) and $33,206 (non-residents) for the 2010-11 academic year. The college made scholarship offers of varying amounts to many students in the entering class, but the amount we spend on scholarships still lags competitor schools, which can entice candidates with three to ten times the scholarship assistance that UT can offer. The generosity of alumni has never been more critical as the college attempts to close this gap and use scholarships to recruit top candidates, many of whom have significant financial need, to consider UT.

Outside the Law

Recent Grads Think Creatively

-Lauren Herbstritt

When Dean Blaze told the Class of 2010 that they needed to be creative and think outside the box in order to find success in the current job market, he had no idea just how creative they could be. Two spring grads, Kristi Bogle and Will Holloway, took those words to heart with surprising results.

Kristi Bogle decided on graduation day that she would enter Oprah's "Search for the Next TV Star." She began with an audition video that was uploaded to the website and used social media like Facebook to get the word out about her video and ask family, friends, classmates, and strangers to vote for her. When the votes were counted, she had over 630,000 votes. That put her in the upper echelon of most popular videos.

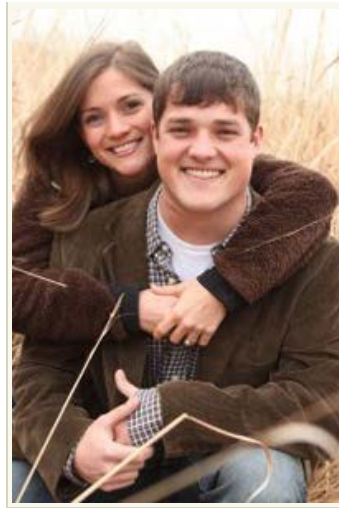

However, as she learned in law school, she had to do due diligence so Kristi auditioned in person in Dallas, Texas. The contestants were called in groups of 12 and she had 30 seconds to make her case for why she should be Oprah's Next TV Star. Kristi says that the education she got at UT College of Law served her well in the interview. She was able to think on her feet, present an argument that stayed on topic, and was not fazed by the idea of competition. She does admit to being more nervous going before the Immigration Court in Memphis during her recent Immigration Clinic than auditioning for Oprah. Now she's waiting to see whether she makes the cut to the second round.

Even with the dream of stardom in her mind, Kristi is spending her summer studying for the bar exam and job-hunting in Washington, D.C. With her intelligence and personality, she will be a star wherever she lands. Watch Kristi's audition at Oprah's website.

Will Holloway's big adventure originated with his fiancé, Marina. After two years of dating, Will proposed to Marina in December 2009. Wedding planning began immediately and talks of a summer wedding (after he finished the bar exam) were formalized. But all of their planning came to a screeching halt in January 2010 when he was diagnosed with Hodgkin's Lymphoma, a form of cancer.

With the final semester of law school only a few days away, Will and Marina began preparing for chemotherapy and frequent journeys between Knoxville and Vanderbilt Medical Center. With treatment, Will's cancer was controlled. His prognosis was good and wedding planning resumed.

Marina discovered the Crate and Barrel $100,000 Ultimate Wedding contest online. They entered through the Crate and Barrel website and began collecting votes. With Marina 300 miles away, Will balanced spring semester classes, chemotherapy in Nashville, and the Crate and Barrel contest.

Out of the 9,000 couples entering, Will and Marina were chosen as one of 15 couples that received honorable mention. They won a $1,000 gift card to Crate and Barrel and continue to plan for their late summer, dream wedding on a beach. The only dark cloud in the story is how they plan to spend the gift card: Marina is advocating for a new bed and Will is advocating for a new dresser. Even in marriage, he will need to use skills learned in law school—negotiation and mediation.

Meet Will and Marina online at the Crate and Barrel site.

Different Kind of Alumni Cruise

-Pamela L. Reeves

Six women from the Class of 1979, who reconnected at an alumni event in the spring of 2009, decided they had a lot of catching up to do so they took a Caribbean cruise together in February of 2010 for four days of nonstop conversation.

The six traveled from all parts of the country in order to make the cruise date and sail from Miami. From left to right, (front row) Kathy Vines Trumbull, June Lee Boothby, Suellen Wideman, (back row) Pam Reeves, Mary Walker, and Linda Thomas Woolsey. The six all still work full time in law related fields.

Much of the time on the cruise was spent catching up on all the loves, jobs, and children's activities from the last 31 years, but there was also lots of time to reminisce about law school days, including the infamous Law Women sports teams and Rump Court. Kathy Vines Trumbull quarterbacked the women's football team in the late 1970s. In one game she took a hit that broke her wrist but stayed in the game and led her team to victory.

Distinguished Alumni Lecturer to Address Chrysler Case

-Tanya G. Brown

Thomas Lauria will return to his alma mater to give the College of Law's annual Distinguished Alumni Lecture nearly 25 years after he graduated.

He will speak at noon in Room 132 of the law building on Friday, Oct. 22.

"In those days, it was such a different place," said Lauria, who now serves as global practice head of the financial restructuring and insolvency group at White & Case in Miami, Florida.

While cosmetic changes like the addition to the law building have spruced things up in his absence, Lauria says he has no doubt the school is still focused on preparing lawyers for the many challenges they will face in practice.

Lauria has called on that preparation, as well a sizable dose of courage, to help him handle his work at White & Case. He has led the firm's efforts in restructuring more than $100 billion in debt in complex restructurings including Washington Mutual Inc., Delphi Corp., Mirant Corp., and the Williams Communications Group.

He drew perhaps his most international attention to date when he was called out by President Barack Obama for his representation of a group of stockholders during the restructuring of American automobile manufacturer Chrysler and its sale to Fiat.

In the spring of 2009, Obama addressed Lauria and the clients he represented in a public speech by saying, "They were hoping that everybody else would make sacrifices, and they would have to make none. ...I don't stand with them. ...I don't stand with those who held out when everybody else is making sacrifices."

Lauria said the chastisement of the shareholders, who would have accepted 50 cents on the dollar for their investment, changed the nature of the case and made him reexamine the law and the U.S. constitution. He expects to share some of his observations about the Chrysler case during his lecture.

"My experience in that case raises broader questions about our legal system and how those of us who participate in it are charged with higher responsibility than we think about on a day-to-day basis," Lauria said.

"The president getting involved in it raises the plane a bit, and the court being unwilling to call the president on it raises eyebrows. Maybe the system doesn't really work by the book. That should raise our eyebrows."

When asked if the case shook his faith in the legal system enough to make him consider a career change, Lauria just laughs. "I still have to pay my mortgage." Currently, Lauria is spending much of his time flying into and out of Texas, where his firm is representing baseball legend Nolan Ryan in a case with a group that is attempting to buy the Texas Rangers baseball team out of bankruptcy.

"I keep moving forward," he says with a laugh.
