THE DEAN'S MESSAGE

At the end of two days of interviews for the deanship last spring, the Dean Search Committee asked me for some thoughts in writing. As they had for each candidate, they requested a brief assessment of the strengths and weaknesses of the College of Law, an indication of the goals I thought the College should seek to attain in the near term, and the changes required to accomplish them. In short, they asked, where are we? Where do we need to be heading? How do we get there?

This was the gist of my response.

1. Some major strengths:

A good scholarly record—all things considered, a remarkable scholarly record. Nationally recognized expertise in some fields. A gratifyingly favorable national reputation among academics.

A gifted and energetic faculty with ambitions for the school.

A reputation for providing a high-quality legal education on affordable terms. Some very good students. Substantial recent gains in attracting and retaining capable minority students.

A reasonably well-designed curriculum reinforced by a strong teaching tradition and a favorable student-faculty ratio. A nationally esteemed clinical program.

Significant service to the community and the state by individual faculty members. Major commitments by individual faculty members to national programs of cultural and intellectual interchange and efforts to influence national policy. Active and visible faculty participation in the work of the AALS and other national organizations.

A dedicated library faculty and staff; a library poised for significant growth.

High student enthusiasm for participation in some co-curricular activities. Signs of a revival of interest on the part of student organizations in serious pursuits.

A reputation among firms in Tennessee and some cities outside Tennessee for graduating students ready to assume the responsibilities of an associate.

A loyal and capable staff.

A secure position, compared to that of many private law schools, as a respected law school within a respected state university.

Approximately 4,500 known living alumni. A growing tradition of alumni support for the school. Structures in place to build on that tradition.

2. Some major weaknesses:

A shortage of resources for just about everything.

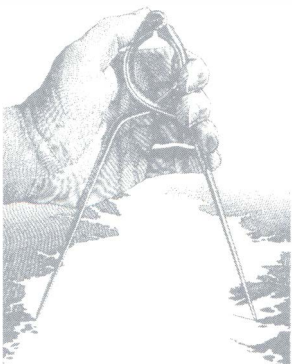

Serious recent inroads into faculty morale. Faculty members questioning the State's commitment.

Damage to the College's competitive position in attracting and retaining qualified faculty. No minority faculty in residence in 1992-93.

Impairment of our ability to attract the best qualified students as a result of publicity regarding accreditation.

Some fairly serious soft spots in the curriculum.

Low staff salaries.

An inadequate physical facility.

Library resources stretched far beyond reasonable limits.

A student body increasingly disengaged as they progress from the first year to the third, troubled by questions about the job market.

Isolation from most of the rest of the university.

Opportunities for professional, intellectual and cultural interchange for faculty and students curtailed by funding cutbacks.

No nationally recognized programs other than the Clinic.

Some perception within the state that we could and should be doing more to help the people of the state.

3. We should renew our commitment to the aspirations of the 1990 self-study, and get to work.

We aspire (we said) to become one of the preeminent law schools in the Southeast, on a par with very good state law schools throughout the country—a law school in which

Students graduate as competent, ethical attorneys, with the skills and knowledge essential to the craft and high standards of professional performance, into jobs commensurate with their talents.

Faculty members fulfill themselves professionally, employing their capabilities in rewarding and productive ways.

Individual and collaborative efforts result in important contributions to the advancement of knowledge about and the improvement of the law, the legal system, and legal education.

There is mutual respect and lively intellectual interchange among a diverse community of faculty members and students, and productive interaction on a regular basis with the rest of the university and members of the larger community, including the bench and bar.

All members of the law school community are treated fairly and humanely, and encouraged to develop confidence in their abilities and a sense of personal worth.

4. We should:

Set about mobilizing resources from every available source—state funding, private giving, grants and contracts.

Raise faculty salaries to a level that acknowledges the caliber of the current faculty and enables us to attract and retain first-rate faculty in the future. (Working target: average salaries at the THEC peer schools.)

Maintain our commitment to faculty diversification. Make the specific commitments necessary to recruit and retain minority faculty.

Create an environment conducive to ambitious and sustained scholarly efforts. Elements: additional chaired professorships; ample and dependable summer research stipends; a more generous release-time program; additional research assistance, travel, library and other logistical support; and other less concrete (and less expensive) measures, such as encouragement, advice and recognition.

Put in place a program to attract more highly qualified students. Enlist alumni to initiate contact with the top prospects among the admittees. Target scholarships to this group; explore the feasibility of tuition waivers coupled with teaching or research assistantships.

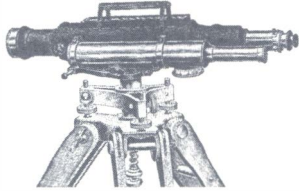

Sharpen our theory regarding the use of non-numerical factors (factors other than GPA and LSAT score) in admissions.

Advocate for increased non-formula funding for minority-student scholarships.

Strengthen the first-year academic support program.

Increase staff salaries across the board.

Staff the curriculum we've got on paper. Broaden the array of elective planning-and-drafting courses, clinical courses, and advanced courses that cap a sequence; satisfy the full demand for simulation skills courses. Strengthen the writing program.

If necessary, expand the adjunct faculty. In any event, set up a system for the orientation [etc.] of adjunct faculty members.

Increase support for faculty development in the area of teaching (travel, etc.).

Provide more assistance to students in their own curriculum planning.

Review selected aspects of the curriculum: the grading system; the sheer volume of material crammed into the first year; our treatment of the ethics of the profession, and values in general; the curricular implications (if any) of our students' performance on the bar. Verify that our elective offerings correspond to areas of real demand for our students' services.

In thinking about the curriculum, consider these propositions: (1) our students do not graduate prepared for practice, and only some join law firms with a strong teaching tradition; (2) many of our students graduate with little confidence in their abilities, feeling inadequately prepared and hostile to the school.

□ Complete the process of obtaining planning funds for the building. Monitor the next phase to ensure careful site evaluation and good plans. Advocate for adequate funding for construction and a transition plan that will minimize disruption. Carefully assess the priority of alumni contributions for the building vis-a-vis other needs.

In the plans for the new building, provide generously for the library. Develop forward-looking plans for collection growth and automation (making optimum use of new technology and inter-library cooperation), to complement the staff development plan already in place. Implement these plans with state support (using the accreditation findings as a spur), supplemented by private giving.

□ Revive dormant programs (e.g., Alumni Distinguished Lecture in Jurisprudence, Jurist-in-Residence) and develop and encourage new programs of intellectual and cultural exchange for students and faculty within the university, at the national level, and internationally. (Examples: joint teaching and research; national conferences and symposia; international faculty exchange.)

Increase support for faculty participation in programs of professional interchange.

Establish a fund to support student-generated programs and projects that (in some combination) contribute to the students' professional development, build community, serve the public, and bring credit on the school.

□ Commit additional resources to the Career Services Office to enable it to adapt to changes in the market for our students' services, and to meet more fully the needs of those who will not become associates in the larger urban firms. (Examples: increase programming in the area of preparation for solo practice and the versatility of the law degree.)

Encourage students, through a voluntary pro bono program and other means, to dedicate at least a portion of their professional lives to service of the public interest.

□ Develop a comprehensive strategy for the Office of Development and Alumni Affairs (including provision for adequate staffing), with clearly defined short-term and long-term priorities, periodically reviewed and revised.

□ Revive the idea of the Law Center. Put into place a well-established, fully funded program of service to the profession and the public, with emphasis on (1) improvement of the law and the legal system, and (2) service to the State.

□ Establish a center or centers in which faculty members and students work together to pursue excellence in a particular field on a major scale. Elements: release time for the faculty member serving as center director; joint student-faculty research; external funding; collaboration with colleagues in other disciplines at the University; teamwork with major governmental entities and private firms in the area (Martin Marietta, ORNL, TVA); possibly, visiting lectureships and fellowships; a second journal; an advanced degree.

The work has begun.

DEVELOPMENT REPORT

Art Stolnitz (center) talks with Dean Dick Wirtz and Director of Career Services, Joann Rothery, about his interest in the current job market.

LARGEST GIFT IN 1992 WILL BE USED FOR CAREER SERVICES

Arthur H. Stolnitz, Class of '52, and his wife, Suzanne, gave the largest single gift to the College of Law during the last fiscal year. Art instructed the Dean to use the gift to best benefit the College; therefore, due to the current recessionary period, the Career Services Office will use the gift to publicize non-traditional legal careers. The Career Services Office will research corporation and other business entities, arrange seminars featuring speakers from various career settings, and expand the Career Services resources library to include relevant periodicals and books on a wide range of career options. Art is the Executive Vice President of Business and Financial Affairs for Lorimar Television in Los Angeles, California.

** Beginning in 1987-88, the College of Law changed the way it calculates the number of gifts/ donors slightly. For the later years, the figures represent the numbers of donors, regardless of how many gifts they may have made during each year. Married donors are counted as one, except when each spouse is a UT law graduate. Totals include gift donors only; pledges are not included.

CLASS PARTICIPATION (PERCENTAGE)

he Class of 1991, at the University of Tennessee College of Law and at law schools nationwide, felt the country's recent economic downturn more fully than their counterparts in last year's class. Despite this fact, statistics indicate that employment for recent graduates remains consistent and stable.

Within nine months of graduation, 90 percent of the class had accepted employment, compared to a nationwide sampling of law school graduates which revealed that 86 percent had accepted employment during the same period. (citations 1 & 2) However, the UT figure was down from 96 percent for the Class of 1990.

After nine months, only five percent of UT's class of 1991 reported that they were unemployed and seeking work, compared to nearly 10 percent of law school graduates nationally.

Like their predecessors at UT and across the country, the majority of the class chose to enter private practice. Sixty-nine percent joined private firms, compared to 64 percent of last year's class who did the same, and to a 66 percent average for UT classes of the last five years. Nationally, 61 percent of law school graduates chose private practice.

While the pattern of private practice employment by size of law firm shifted in several categories from 1990 to 1991, approximately 74 percent of graduates joining private firms both years went to those with 25 attorneys or less (compared to 49 percent nationally).

Those in the solo practice/self-employed category rose to 7.4 percent in the Class of 1991, compared to 4.4 percent of last year's class and to 4.8 percent nationwide. While almost 55 percent of 1990 graduates joined "very small" firms of 2-10 members, the figure dropped to 47 percent in 1991. Those joining "small firms" of 11-25 members rose from 15 percent in 1990 to 20 percent in 1991. The category for "large firms" of 51-100 members rose slightly from 7 percent in 1990 to 8.5 percent in 1991.

More than three-fourths of the 1991 graduates chose to remain in Tennessee. The 24 percent that chose employment out of state matched very closely the 22 percent average for UT classes of the past five years. Of the 33 students employed out of state, seven went to the District of Columbia; four each to Texas and Georgia; three each to Florida and Kentucky; two to North Carolina; and one each to Arkansas, Alaska, Illinois, Louisiana, Missouri, Mississippi, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. Of the 1991 graduates staying in Tennessee, 25 percent chose to remain in Knoxville, the same as the average for the classes of 1986-90.

Fifty-nine percent of the 137 graduates who reported employment included salary information, showing a range of $19,500 to $85,000. The annual average salary of $38,587 reported for all locations and all employment categories was down marginally from $38,652 for the class of 1990. The average annual salary nationwide for the class of 1991 was $44,300.

While the number of employers recruiting on campus decreased for the second straight year, the number of interviews increased slightly. Seventy-eight employers held 1,141 interviews in 1991-92, compared to 87 employers and 1,138 interviews in 1990-91.

Thirty-three employers recruited third-year students on campus in Fall 1991, down from 49 in 1990 and from 63 in 1989. This appeared to reflect the growing trend, noted in last year's annual report, for postponing the hiring of entry-level attorneys until bar results are announced and/or practice needs are certain, rather than hiring in the fall a year before the new graduate is licensed. The trend seems most apparent in firms with fewer than 25 members, where the majority of our graduates going into private practice begin their careers.

<sup>1</sup> Statistics were tallied at this point in time because of the due date for reporting to the National Association for Law Placement. Previously, this has been made at six months after graduation.

he Law Library continues to serve the University and legal communities, as well as the geographic community, as the premier legal research and information center of the area. A wide variety of information sources is provided to users, ranging from traditional book and journal collections to microformats, on-linedatabases, and CD-ROM access.

Thanks to a special allocation from the Dean and the Chancellor, Law Library staffing is increasing by two full-time positions. The first, a clerical bookkeeper position, has been filled, allowing the Law Library Director a great deal more time to concentrate on his administrative responsibilities. The second, a professional-level reference position, should be filled by mid-1993. This position will provide professional reference coverage for evening and weekend hours not currently staffed and professional assistance to the Public Services Librarian in his legal research teaching responsibilities.

Another significant provision of the allocation is an increase of 14 percent in acquisitions funding. While some of this increase must be used for the maintenance of the serials collections, most of it is being spent to fill in gaps in subject collections and to establish new collections in topic areas heretofore undeveloped. Collection analysis and development become increasingly significant at times when acquisitions funding is supplemented.

The five-year comparison chart illustrates current collection growth. The Law Library now contains 345,863 volumes and microform volume equivalents, a 6.2 percent increase over last year and an increase of 18.9 percent over the last five years.

The Law Library continues to be up-to-date in its provision of legal database access, including WESTLAW, LEXIS, NEXIS, and DIALOG. Other formats of access technology are represented in the library by a CD-ROM periodical index (Legal-Trac), online access to the OLIS system at the UTK Hodges Library, and by CALI, a series of interactive legal instruction programs.
