THE DEAN'S MESSAGE

RESEARCH AND RESOURCES: THE ELECTRONIC MACHETE

One of our primary functions as the state's land-grant-university law school is to provide essential resources for legal research—research as a step in the process of solving legal problems, and research in support of legal scholarship. Some might regard the first of these as genuinely important and the second as an academic frill. I would ask anyone who holds that view to take another look at the arguments.

"It can hardly be doubted," say the authors of the MacCrate Report, "that the ability to do legal research is one of the skills that any competent legal practitioner must possess."

Right. One of the pleasures of this job is coming in on a weekend (that in itself is a qualified pleasure) and encountering judges and lawyers, sometimes in their leaf-raking clothes, on their way in or out of the library. "A little research to do," they say—sometimes, I suspect, substantially understating the time they have just put in or are about to commit.

As the largest law library in the region, based at a university with 25,000 students, our law library is an essential resource for legal research for thousands of people. They include lawyers and judges, clerks and paralegals, law students and faculty, students and faculty from all over the university, and people in general from Knoxville and the surrounding communities. The library provides not only access to information, but also reference help, duplication facilities, and training of many kinds at many levels of sophistication.

As the stockpile of accessible legal information grows and formats change, keeping abreast of the needs of the patrons of the library is challenging to the point of intimidation. In 1983 and again in 1990, teams from the American Bar Association and the Association of American Law Schools found that despite our best efforts UT was falling seriously behind. They noted shortcomings in equipment, staffing, the collection, and the space required to house the library's multiple functions.

Thanks to the commitment of the University administration and the generosity of our alumni, those challenges are now being met. Some of the details will be found in the Library's portion of this report. Here it is enough to say that we have reached the point that we are no longer thinking in terms of catchup, but are planning a major move forward.

The vision that inspires us is the vision of a law library that serves as a statewide resource for legal research. There are four components to it: (1) automation of current library functions such as cataloging and circulation; (2) storage of legal information in new compact formats accessible electronically; (3) interconnection with other libraries across the country; and (4) hookups, via telephone lines and modems, with computers in law offices and county courthouses around the state.

The technology is available. The construction of the new facility gives us the opportunity to build to the current state of the art, while retaining enough flexibility to adapt to future changes in formats and software.

Much remains to be worked out. The point is this: though it's by no means a sure thing, it's far from utopian to imagine lawyers and judges in Tennessee conducting legal research at their computers in their own offices, searching the collection of the University of Tennessee Law Library and the collections of other law libraries around the country, and perhaps even striking a few more keys and punching up the "pages" of the "books" in those libraries on their own computer screens.

There is a second side to this business of research and resources.

In its 1990 Self-Study, the faculty worked hard on a mission statement for the College. A mission statement can be a piece of fluff. Ours is not. It states in part:

"We aspire to become one of the preeminent law schools in the Southeast, on a par with very good state law schools throughout the country—a law school in which . . . individual and collaborative efforts result in important contributions to the advancement of knowledge about and the improvement of the law, the legal system, and legal education."

The thinking behind this is reflected in some recent statements by Chancellor Bill Snyder of the University of Tennessee, Knoxville. Speaking this fall to the Liberal Arts Advisory Council, Chancellor Snyder said:

"Scholarship of the highest quality by our faculty and students is central to our mission. Scholarship is always to be pursued in balance with good teaching and with an understanding of the potential for high quality teaching and scholarship to reinforce and enrich each other.

UTK aspires for its scholarship to be of increasing national and international relevance and recognition. We affirm that good teaching requires more than just teaching the scholarship of others but requires contribution through active scholarship to what is to be taught, thought and practiced in the education of students."

At a very good law school, scholarship and teaching are two sides of the same coin. Members of this faculty contribute significantly to the body of legal scholarship in their respective fields. In civil rights, products liability, criminal procedure, commercial law, space law, medical malpractice, pre-trial litigation, and international human rights, among others, the faculty enjoys a national reputation for its work. With faculty encouragement and assistance, our students are now publishing articles in their own right. The results promote the improvement of the law and the legal system, enhance our teaching, and bring credit on the school.

Good research is indispensable to good scholarship. In fact, research pervades virtually every aspect of our work, including the Tennessee Law

Review; the co-curricular trial and appellate advocacy programs; and a striking array of public service activities ranging from pro bono casework by the students and faculty to studies and recommendations for revision of the State's rules of evidence, pattern jury instructions, sentencing guidelines, and court structure.

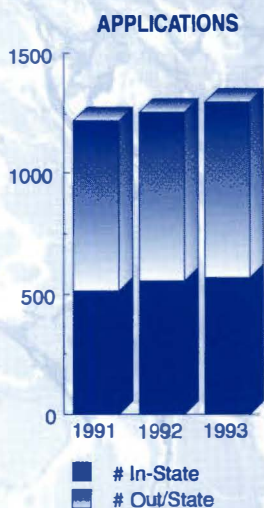

Generating resources to support the full range of research conducted under the auspices of our "law center" will be no small undertaking. In this, as in so many other things, there's no standing still—you're either falling behind or blazing trail . . .

Hand me that electronic machete.

1992-93 LEGAL CLINIC

The Legal Clinic at the College of Law has been a vital university and community resource for over 46 years. Faculty and students in the program, now the oldest continuously operating law school clinic in the nation, have provided representation to thousands of local people in need of legal assistance. At different times the Legal Clinic has served as the principal public defender and legal services provider for the metropolitan Knoxville area. Hundreds of students have gained practical training and gained insights into the unique legal needs of the under-represented poor in the process. Building on this tradition of filling the unmet legal needs of the community, the Legal Clinic has expanded starting a new project to serve homeless people in Knox County.

With the award of a three-year grant from the United States Department of Education, the Legal Clinic has established the Homeless Persons Representation Project. In doing so, the Clinic has joined an increasing number of lawyers and groups throughout the country responding to the legal needs of homeless people. The National Coalition for the Homeless estimates that there are nearly three million homeless people in the United States — over a third of them parents and children.

Phyliss Wimberly, along with Legal Clinic Director Doug Blaze (front row, white shirt), holds an open forum for students to ask questions about the clinic.

Under the direction of Phyliss Wimberly, the project has established an extensive network with local shelters, public and private agencies, and other groups serving the homeless. Because prospective clients have an almost infinite variety of problems, the project has had to develop several different approaches to serve even the clients' basic needs. The faculty has adopted an interdisciplinary strategy mixing law and social work. A social worker, Pamela Wolf, is part of the faculty for the project. By blending the two disciplines, the program is better able to use existing resources, sharing ideas and expertise, and to develop holistic strategies to improve the quality of life of the clients.

The student attorneys in the program handle a wide range of legal problems, including housing, employment, public benefits, medical care, mental health, and education issues. Students visit the homeless shelters to interview clients weekly. If a potential client is unable to attend an intake session, the individual can contact the Legal Clinic directly. Some students provide services to organizations including the Knoxville Coalition for the Homeless, Knoxville Housing Partnership, and Job's Children, performing tasks that range from helping in the formation of nonprofit corporations, obtaining tax exempt status, drafting position papers, and participating in lobbying efforts. Students also conduct workshops to provide legal information and counseling to groups of homeless people to empower those individuals to overcome their legal problems themselves.

By participating, students have the opportunity to learn and develop a variety of skills. Students learn interviewing, counseling, case theory development, fact investigation, case management, negotiation, evidentiary presentation, and team building. Even students planning to practice tax or corporate law learn skills useful in those areas.

Most important, students learn what it means to be a professional, responsible for real clients with real needs. Clients reflect the full spectrum of society: women and men, parents and children, black and white, young and old, educated and illiterate. Some clients are the victims of disease, mental illness, or substance abuse — homeless or near homeless with immediate needs. The students' assistance may mean the difference between a client living in an alley or in an apartment, receiving food, medical care or going without. The Clinic is the last hope for these people. The challenges and pressures students face daily are very similar to the demands they will confront as lawyers after graduation.

The Clinic is succeeding, serving the needs of a special segment of the community society and providing a unique educational opportunity for students. In the past year the Homeless Persons Representation Project has served over 140 clients. More than thirty students have participated. Even the local bar has become involved by establishing a panel of lawyers to take referrals on a pro bono basis from the program.

The project cannot eliminate the plight of the homeless or even meet all of the legal needs of homeless people in Knoxville. The project will probably not significantly change the institutions and systems that contribute to the homeless crisis. Hopefully, however, the clinic will make a positive difference in the lives of both the students and the clients they represent. As one client said recently, "She [the student] is the best lawyer I've ever had."

FACULTY ACTIVITIES

Gary L. Anderson received an award from the Tennessee Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers for his efforts in helping TACDL's writing competition, indigent defense work, and parole review board.

Frances L. Ansley was a contributor to Fighting Back in Appalachia: Traditions of Resistance and Change. Her article, "Standing Rusty and Rolling Empty: Law, Poverty, and America's Brooding Industrial Base," was published in 81 Georgetown Law Journal 1757 (1993). "As I finished this article," relates Professor Ansley, "the law school demonstrated an amazing capacity to help me rise to the occasion because of a real team effort and coordinated resource mobilization. At one time I had three student researchers tracking down sources, our man in duplication copying like a maniac, and the government documents specialist in the law library tracking down obscure Congressional hearing testimony. I was also in regular touch with the graduate library catalog via modem, our reference librarian called often with specific page numbers, and my secretary faxed, phoned, mailed, typed, copied, and organized on a daily basis. The people on our human team are talented and energetic and ready to pitch in. We are all working to make sure that our access to information and technology enable us to contribute in a high quality way to regional and national dialogues about emerging social problems and public policy." She also worked with law students last summer during the Haitian Refugee Project in Miami. As a member of the Tennessee Industrial Renewal Network, Professor Ansley travelled and spoke extensively on the North American Free Trade Agreement and the Maquiladora problem.

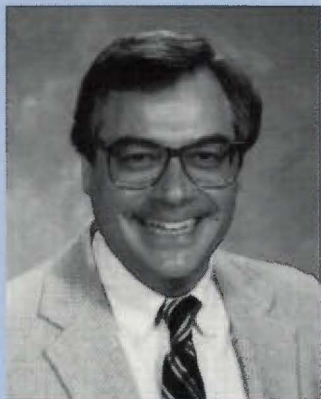

William J. Beintema continues to work diligently for the Southeastern Chapter of the American Association of Law Libraries. He serves on several of their committees and attends meetings as both a participant and facilitator.

Reba Best finished Computer Law and Software: A Bibliography of Crime, Liability, Abuse and Security, 1984 through 1992 (McFarland, 1993). She also completed the 1992 supplement to The Insanity Defense: A Bibliographic Research Guide. Professor Best co-authored both with Professor Cheryn Picquet.

Jerry P. Black, Jr. continues to develop the criminal advocacy program in the Clinic Program. "There is nothing like using local talent as resources," says Professor Black. "Area criminal defense attorneys such as Tom Dillard, Herb Moncier, Steve Oberman, and Ann Short speak to clinic students and help us demonstrate what kind of lawyer we hope our graduates will become." He serves as a board member for the Knoxville Legal Aid Society.

Kate Bunker attended conferences and workshops on clinical and advocacy teaching with faculty development funds. At various programs she discussed clinical legal education with scholars and teachers from throughout the United States. "This exchange of ideas and information with other teachers in the field is not only invigorating," says Professor Bunker, "it is extremely helpful in keeping our clinical program in the forefront of clinical legal education."

Neil P. Cohen continues to serve as a referee in Duke Law School's Private Adjudication Center, arbitrating claims under the Dalkon Shield trust. His current research project is a book on criminal procedure with Vanderbilt Law Professor Don Hall. "It would be impossible to do the legal research I do without library resources and library staff cooperation," says Professor Cohen. He co-authored an article, "The Prevalence and Use of Criminal Defenses: A Preliminary Study," which was published in the Summer 1993 issue of the Tennessee Law Review.

Joseph G. Cook signed a contract with Clark Boardman Callaghan to do a third edition of Constitutional Rights of the Accused. Supplementing three other books each year required endless hours of library research as well as computer research time in his office. Professor Cook was the featured speaker at several CLE programs last year.

Judy M. Cornett participated in two panels at the American Society for Eighteenth-Century Studies Annual Meeting in Providence, Rhode Island in April. As a member of the Woman's Caucus panel, she gave a paper entitled "The Treachery of Perception: Evidence and Inference in Clarissa." Professor Cornett also served as a co-respondent for a panel discussion on "Constructing and Deconstructing Jurisprudence: Unruly Narratives Meet the Rule of Law."

She used faculty development funds to travel to the conference and feels fortunate to have this resource available.

Thomas Y. Davies continues to work on a multi-article history of the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule. "In addition to the usual library resources and that most precious of all resource, time," says Professor Davies. "I made particular use of the library's microfiche collection of U.S. Supreme Court briefs going back beyond 1900." He is now drawing on library support for locating turn-of-the-century editions of legal treatises on constitutional law and evidence, for compiling a legislative history of the 1917 Espionage Act, and for information about the first federal statute that generally provided for search warrants.

R. Lawrence Dessem had his second book, Pretrial Litigation in a Nutshell, published by the West Publishing Company last year, and an article, "Judicial Reporting Under the Civil Justice Reform Act," published in the University of Pittsburgh Law Review. Professor Dessem serves as the College of Law's Associate Dean for Academic Affairs and is a member of the Tennessee Supreme Court Commission on Dispute Resolution. Last year he served as a reporter for the Advisory Group on Litigation Cost and Delay for the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee. Upon receiving the 1993 Chancellor's Award for Excellence in Teaching, he was cited for his extraordinary rapport with students, his use of a variety of teaching techniques, and his ability to lead students to critically examine issues and focus on the practical application of legal principles. "In several of my courses, I play tape recordings of short excerpts of Supreme Court arguments," states Professor Dessem. "This adds a nice touch of realism to our class discussion of Supreme Court opinions. Students quickly learn that one cannot be a good advocate without a thorough knowledge of legal doctrine. They also gain a better view of competing policy considerations when they hear them argued before the Supreme Court. I am glad that the law school has enabled me to obtain the tape recordings that I use from the National Archives."

Grayfred Gray
Bass, Berry & Sims Faculty
Award

Grayfred B. Gray continues to work as an advocate for mediation as an alternative to judicial dispute resolution. Last year he attended national training sessions on mediation and assisted the Knoxville Bar Association in establishing a local mediation program. Professor Gray taught mediation classes in several other UT departments and at local and state family service agencies. He also serves on the Advisory Board of the UT Conflict Resolution Program. As a member of a campus-wide team, he continues to develop computer programs to assist attorneys with legal expert systems for client and law firm use. UT's electronic mail facility and his computer were essential tools in building a real-world-scale legal expert system. Research in this area has resulted in lectures and articles. He co-authored an article "Readability of the Law: Forms of Law for Building Legal Expert Systems" which was published in the Winter 1993 Jurimetrics Journal. Professor Gray notes: "Both of these projects support my teaching and enable me to make a public service contribution that I could not make without the school's resources and research facilities."

Amy Morris Hess was recognized by the College of Law's chapter of Phi Delta Phi as the 1993 Honorary Faculty Initiate. Electronic databases, computers and word processing resources, and a research assistant provide strong support for her as she works on the manuscript for a textbook on trusts and estates. Professor Hess will also contribute a chapter on estate planning to a legal guide for lay people. Both publications are due out in 1994.

Amy Hess

Patrick Hardin served as editor in chief of The Developing Labor Law: The Board, the Courts, and the National Labor Relations Act (ABA, 1992, 3rd ed.), regarded by many as the definitive treatise. Jean Moore, a reference librarian in the Law Library, assisted him extensively by finding government documents and national court cases.

Mary Jo Hoover continues to serve as the Associate Dean for Student Affairs. She also coordinates the Legal Process Program which involves training in library research.

Joseph H. King, Jr., had an article, "Exculpatory Agreements for Volunteers in Youth Activities - The Alternative to 'Nerf@ Tiddlywinks,'" published in the Ohio State Law Journal, Volume 53, Number 3. "In researching and writing my Ohio State article," Professor King reports, "I used research assistants primarily for citation verification. Our secretary's superb assistance was a constant source of support for all aspects of my teaching, research, and administrative duties. I have also come to rely on my computer more and more. Virtually all of my creative writing is now drafted by me on my computer. Equally significant, I now find LEXIS and WESTLAW essential instruments for virtually all of my professional activities running the gamut from research for an article to 'grazing' in exotic databases for some new idea or perspective."

Frederick S. Le Clercq taught American Constitutional Law and North American Studies at the University of Bonn in Germany this summer with assistance from a Professional Development Award from The University of Tennessee.

Robert M. Lloyd had two articles published: "The Absolute Bar Rule in UCC Foreclosure Sales: A Prescription for Waste," Volume 40, Number 3, UCLA Law Review and "Article 9 and Real Estate Law: Practical Solutions for Some Bothersome Problems," 29 Idaho Law Review 583 (1993). He wrote a computer program for a CLE seminar in Colorado. With a new and faster computer now in his office, Professor Lloyd plans to design and test more programs for the Center for Computer-Assisted Legal Research (CALI).

Carol A. Mutter's article, "Rethinking Assumptions of Risk After the Adoption of Comparative Fault," was published in the Fall 1992 issue of the Memphis State University Law Review. Her research assistant and the law library were valuable resources in researching the article.

Jerry W. Phillips had two articles published last year. "McIntyre v. Balentine and the Activist Tennessee Supreme Court" was published in the Fall 1992 issue of the Memphis State University Law Review. "Marbury v. Madison and Section 13 of the 1789 Judiciary Act" appeared in the Fall 1992 issue of the Tennessee Law Review. Professor Phillips is the United States Correspondent to the Consumer Law Journal. The journal provides a forum where current developments in consumer law worldwide, which are of relevance to consumer groups, manufacturers or importers and their legal advisors, can be noted and discussed.

Cheryn Picquet co-authored Computer Law and Software: A Bibliography of Crime, Liability, Abuse and Security, 1984 through 1992 (McFarland, 1993) (with Professor Reba Best). "Thanks to the research funds made available through the College," says Professor Picquet. "I was able to hire an assistant to work on the book with me." She is also the newsletter editor for the East Tennessee Lawyers Association for Women.

Carl Pierce
Carden Award for Outstanding Service to the Institution

Carl A. Pierce taught in the College's Academic Support Program, served on the Faculty Senate Athletics Committee, and was the College of Law's representative to the Graduate Council at UT. He also serves as the JD/MBA advisor to law students.

Glenn H. Reynolds testified before the Senate Finance Committee's Subcommittee on International Trade in Washington, D.C., in June. He spoke about Japanese Satellite Procurement, "Super 301," and provisions of the 1988 Trade Act. The hearings were convened to investigate Japan's attempt to use unfair trade practices and use its protected home market to establish a base from which Japanese industry could target the satellite market worldwide. "Establishing a free-market in the commercial space field is very important," says Reynolds. "Competition provides incentives for producers to lower costs and increase capabilities." Professor Reynolds is the chair of the Policy Committee of the National Space Society. He was the author of three published articles last year: "Outer Space and Peace: Some Thoughts on Structures and Relations," Summer 1992 Symposium issue of the Tennessee Law Review; "Penumbral Reasoning on the Right," University of Pennsylvania Law Review, Volume 140, Number 4, April 1992; and "International Space Law: Into the Twenty-First Century," 25 Vanderbilt Journal of Transitional Law 225 (1992).

Dean H. Rivkin continues to spearhead the landlord/tenant program in the Clinic. He serves as a member of the board of the Society of American Law Teachers and is vice-chair of the American Bar Association's Section of Administrative Law Environmental Values Subcommittee. Professor Rivkin helped found the Tennessee Center of Justice and Education, Inc. last year. The Center is a public interest advocacy group devoted to the rights of children and the disabled.

John A. Sebert, Jr. returned to the faculty following a two-year stint as Deputy Director of the Association of American Law Schools in Washington, D.C. He taught Commercial Law, Contracts Drafting, and Remedies. Professor Sebert is now Dean Sebert of the University of Baltimore School of Law.

John L. Sobieski, Jr. continues to serve as the reporter of the Tennessee Supreme Court Commission to Study Appellate Courts. He also presented two CLE programs last year on civil rights. Professor Sobieski uses the resources of the law library extensively as he gathers information

John Sobieski
Carden Award for Outstanding Service to the Institution to supplement the seven volume Civil Rights Actions, which he co-authored with Professor Joseph Cook.

Barbara Stark
Carden Award for Outstanding Scholarship

Barbara J. Stark has been designated the Carden Research Fellow for 1993 and will work on an article entitled, "Feminist Rhetoric and the 'Other Half' of the International Bill of Rights." Last year research assistance from the College of Law enabled her to present papers and represent the College at the annual meetings of the Association of American Law Schools and the American Society of International Law, at the North American Conference of the International Society of Family Law, and at the Conference on Feminist Legal Theory at Columbia University. Professor Stark also published two articles: "Postmodern Rhetoric, Economic Rights and An International Text: 'A Miracle for Breakfast,'" Virginia Journal of International Law (March 1993) and "Economic Rights in the United States and International Human Rights Law: Toward an Entirely New Strategy," Hastings Law Journal (1992).

Gregory M. Stein studies emerging democracies of Eastern and Central Europe as a consultant to the American Bar Association's Central and East European Law Initiative. He finds the help of a research assistant a useful aid to his class preparation and his research and writing.

Penny Tschantz serves as an Instructor in Legal Writing and works with students individually in the Legal Writing Program. She coordinated and presented several "improve-your-writing" seminars for students last year.

Steven R. Thorpe spoke at the Southeastern Chapter of the American Association of Law Libraries 1993 Annual Meeting in Charleston, West Virginia, in April. The title of his speech was "You Want Me to Put What Where?" - Finding Space for Automation When There's No Room Left." He also presented two workshops on office technology last year.

Barry M. Wertheimer attended the Association of American Law Schools' Workshop for New Law Teachers in Washington, D.C., July 1992.

Phyllis C. Wimberly supervised the Homeless Persons Representation Project which won the Project of the Year Award from the National Association of Social Workers.

Pamela L. Wolf works with the Homeless Persons Representation Project as a social worker and instructor to third-year law students taking civil clinic. She served as chair of the Advocacy Committee for the Coalition for the Homeless, a Knoxville organization dedicated to promoting the needs of the homeless. Ms. Wolf was also a member of the Tennessee Commission on Social Welfare, which studies state issues regarding mental health and health care reforms, and a member of the Knox Housing Partnership Board which finds housing for the homeless and mentally ill.

Richard S. Wirtz serves as the Deans' elected representative to the Chancellor's Planning and Budgeting Advisory Committee. He co-chairs the American Bar Association's Workshop for New Law Deans and serves as a member of the Planning Committee for the ABA Summer Seminar for New Law Deans. Dean Wirtz has been appointed by Chief Justice Lyle Reid of the Tennessee Supreme Court to the Commission on the Future of the Tennessee Judicial System.

DEVELOPMENT REPORT

Suzanne Livingood

FROM THE DIRECTOR OF DEVELOPMENT AND ALUMNI AFFAIRS

The connection between development and resources is obvious. Private dollars donated to the College of Law are very important resources. As you browse through these pages, you will begin to appreciate just how many programs, scholarships, student and faculty awards and honors, faculty research and professorships are supported by private dollars. Pretty incredible, don't you agree? The law school would be a pale shadow of what it is now without these. So much is made possible because of your financial help.

The connection that may be less obvious to someone who doesn't work in an office of development and alumni affairs is the great wealth of people resources this school has. The alumni serve the school in numerous ways, not merely by the donation of their money. The Alumni Advisory Council and the Dean's Circle are two more visible ways alumni are involved with the school. There are many, many less obvious ways. You will read in the Career Services article about two, Lawyers of the Present and the Career Services Committee. Alumni attend career days at their local colleges and universities showcasing the UT College of Law. Alumni can be seen in our halls, guest lecturing, sharing their knowledge, expertise and career experiences with students. It is here where the practitioner and the academician, the student and the alum, meet to share a common heritage and future.

In this office, students and alumni are synonymous. Students are our "in-house alums". As you will soon read, they have become a significant resource when it comes to fund raising and advocacy for the school. The class gift and the student volunteered annual phone-a-thon have far reaching benefits. Their enthusiasm and involvement in the school is contagious. Their generosity is exemplary.

My first complete year at the College has heightened my appreciation of the special qualities of the University of Tennessee College of Law community. The Dean, the faculty, the students, and the alumni have an exciting vision for the school. If you are not already active, hop aboard; you will be glad you did.

FIRST ANNUAL PHONE-A-THON

Imagine, when you were in law school, giving up four hours of prime, evening study hours to get on a phone and ask for money for the school. Thirty-three students volunteered from one to three such nights for the fall 1992 phone-a-thon.

Phi Delta Phi wanted to help the school raise money for the law library. They were keenly aware of the importance of the library for students, faculty and the entire legal community. They knew the library's budget had been very tight the last several years forcing a cutback in the purchase of many titles. Micki Griffin and Pete Halverstadt, Phi Delta Phi members, agreed to co-chair the phone-a-thon.

Al Separk, Class of '69, gave the phone-a-thon a running start when he offered to match pledges up to a total contribution of $5,000. The students made sure that they collected all that Al promised. By the end of the phone-a-thon over $12,000 had been pledged. Then something unusual happened. More money was actually donated than pledged. The final tally indicates that the phone-a-thon raised $15,901 from 199 alums. Capping the drive was the promise by one alum, over and above these totals, of a $10,000 President's Club pledge!

CLASS OF 1993 SCHOLARSHIP ENDOWMENT

Equally exciting was the Class of '93 Class Gift solicitation. The '93 Development Council, co-chaired by Milton Magee, Sherry Mahar and Jack Mayfield, set out to better the record 70 percent participation set by the Class of '92. They did ... by a single percentage point.

The Class of '93 chose as their class gift a scholarship designed to assist a student with great financial need. Third-year students were asked to make pledges over a five-year period with payments gradually increasing each year. Members of the Class of '93 pledged $28,642 for the Class of 1993 Scholarship Endowment.

Homecoming, September 26, 1992

Tom Overton, Denver, CO, chats with Dean Wirtz (right). He received a t-shirt for travelling the farthest to attend the Classes of 1982 reunion.

The next several pages contain the many names of alums, friends, faculty, and staff who made financial contributions to the school during the fiscal year 1992-93. The list has grown by over 300 donors from the previous year.

THANK YOU VERY MUCH.

Host Bob Crossley, Knoxville, presents classmate Rex Moody, Memphis, with a UT Law t-shirt for being the member of the Class of 1952 who came the farthest to attend the reunion.

Ron Billmyer of Charleston, SC, received the t-shirt for the Class of 1972 for coming the farthest to attend his reunion.

This is a new feature in our Annual Report. In previous annual reports, we have recognized only those donors who are new members of the University Societies and Presidents' Club and who have designated Law to receive all or a portion of their gift. We believe that those most generous donors should receive ongoing recognition and have decided to publish each year an honor roll for those who have made or pledged gifts which qualify them for membership in a UT gift society and who have become members. We have diligently checked and rechecked records. On this first attempt, we may miss some people. If we have omitted your name, please call the Office of Development and Alumni Affairs immediately, 615/974-6691, so we can correct our records and include you in future Annual Reports. If you think you have made contributions or provided for bequests which would qualify you for a UT gift society membership, please call so that we can initiate the membership process.

"The Book of Proverbs says the 'plans fail for lack of counsel, but with many advisers they succeed.' (Pr. 15:22). The faculty is a resource of counsel and advice that cannot be catalogued, computerized or contained within the bricks and mortar of a research facility; a resource too often overlooked and undervalued."

Gary R. Wade
 Class of '73

"I am especially appreciative of the efforts Dean Wirtz, his staff, and the entire faculty have made to integrate the College of Law with our local, legal community. Our university is a great resource for law clerks on the Supreme Court, the Court of Criminal Appeals, and the Court of Appeals. Judge Tipton, Judge Byers, and Judge White have made use of the time and talents of law students who wish to volunteer their services to the court during the summer months. Professor Sobieski has provided expertise to the Tennessee Commission to Study the Appellate Courts. Professor Cohen has provided expert analysis on the criminal law for the Tennessee Sentencing Commission. In general, the faculty has provided valuable resource materials to area judges on particularly difficult legal issues arising in the state court system. I perceive a growing union between the appellate courts and the University of Tennessee College of Law. The end result should be an overall improvement in this state's administration of justice."

Class of '82

"Among its fine assets, the one I probably appreciate the most is the Law Library with all its splendid resources. The staff are unfailingly helpful, and they seem to tolerate bumbling lawyers who don't know where to find the materials they want, don't know how to use the computers or even the old-fashioned card catalog, and don't understand that LEXIS and WestLaw aren't free services for alumni. They also help to calm down these same lawyers when they get frustrated by the copy machines and make very unprofessional remarks about them. Being close to the law school enables our firm to keep library costs to a minimum, and our law clerks enjoy the convenience of parking at our office and walking back and forth to class and to the stacks for doing research. We have occasionally used the "STAT" research service in Career Services when we urgently need help with a project.

I regard many of the faculty as personal friends and have found them, along with other professors who came to UT "after my time," to be extremely valuable sources of knowledge, advice, and inspiration over the years.

Our firm invariably turns to Career Services when recruiting law clerks or associate attorneys. Joanne Rothery and Jane Eppes are masters at the art of organizing a placement office, setting up interviews, etc. We find Lawyers of the Future to be helpful as a recruitment resource.

We subscribe to the Tennessee Law Review. The level of scholarship remains high and its publication enhances the school's reputation. The periodic "Surveys of the Law" are invaluable references. I always scan the other publications, such as Alumni Headnotes, although I wish my former classmates would spice up their descriptions of what has been going on in their lives since graduation. The Alumni Office does a fine job organizing class reunions, if my ten-year reunion in 1992 at the Hyatt is a typical example."

#Donors	632	878	1023	940	1,252

*Pledges are not necessarily payable during the same fiscal year in which they are made. Pledges include cash as well as bequests which are property documented with specific dollar amounts.

Beginning in 1987-88, the College of Law changed the way it calculates the number of gifts/donors slightly. Prior to 1987-88, figures represent numbers of gifts, which may include more than one gift from the same donor or donors. For the later years, the figures represent the numbers of donors, regardless of how many gifts they may have made during each year. Married donors are counted as one, except when each spouse is a UT law graduate. Totals include gift donors; only pledges are not included.

THE LAW LIBRARY

A VALUABLE RESOURCE

Ever since the establishment of the written word, society has looked for ways to preserve those words. The Law Library preserves and makes available the written word in support of the College of Law's mission to educate, produce scholarship and research, and assist the legal community at large.

University of Tennessee College of Law alumni have established many ways to help the Law Library acquire and preserve materials in support of the school's mission. Alumni support in the past has included money raised during the annual phone-a-thon. The phone-a-thon is organized by the Roosevelt Inn Chapter of Phi Delta Phi Legal Fraternity, a national legal fraternity. For the past two years, members have called alumni and asked for their financial support. This year alumni contributed or pledged almost $30,000.00 to the library.

Other support includes three endowments which are specifically earmarked for the University of Tennessee Law Library. The endowments include the Class of 1992 Law Library Endowment, the Friedman and Sissman, P.C. Legal History Law Library Endowment Fund, and the Judge Robert Smartt Law Library Endowment. There is also a general Law Library Endowment Fund which alumni have contributed to for many years. Alumni have always been very supportive of the Law Library. Their support has allowed the library to purchase more materials than would be otherwise possible with our existing budget.

The University of Tennessee College of Law Library is entering an exciting new era in the storage and retrieval of information. As the Library plans for the future, serious consideration is being given to ways to provide better service and access to materials for the local bench and bar. We anticipate that once again our alumni will lend us their support as we enter this new era.

For hundreds of years the written word has been printed on paper and stored on shelves. Traditionally library users had to physically come to the library to use its collection. Recent advances in technology has provided libraries with many ways to store and disseminate information.

Technocrats tell us that libraries will encounter three phases in the quest to become fully electronic. The University of Tennessee College of Law Library is currently in the first of the three phases. In the first phase libraries use online databases and other electronic tools as supplements to the hard copy collection. The majority of the collection remains in hard copy. In phase two the library will continue to provide secondary material and historical materials in paper and rely on compact discs and online services for case and statutory law. In phase three most information will be accessed through the law school network. Materials available in hard copy will consist of obscure materials not available in an electronic format.

As the Law Library prepares to convert to electronic sources, costs will be high. The library will try to maintain dual, paper and electronic collections. Cases and statutory material will eventually be moved into high density storage areas. After the collection stabilizes, areas in the library previously used to shelve books will be used to accommodate work stations and computer labs used for training and printing.

The law library of the future will be a superhighway of information available to its users in remote locations. UT College of Law alumni will have access to their Law Library online catalog. Through searching our catalog users will be able to determine if the library owns the material needed. Some materials, non-copyrighted or leased material such as state and local codes, court rules, government and periodical indexes, etc. will be available on a law school network which will collect and disseminate this information to the law school community.

The network will be accessible through work stations located in offices, the library, and at home. The software which will make the information available will be highly integrated (work easily with other software) to make the transfer of data between applications possible. The software will also allow users to move from one application to another in a seamless or transparent environment, without the user being aware of the operations taking place. Users will also be able to "jump" from one piece of information to another due to hypertext capabilities. In documents with hypertext capabilities citations are "read" by the computer and the user can access that citation without exiting the original document.

Alumni support, along with increased state support and a new facility, will make the electronic age for the College of Law Library possible.

A PRIMARY RESEARCH FACILITY

The Law Library serves the College of Law students and faculty as their primary research facility. It is also the major source of legal information for the entire University and the bench and bar of the State of Tennessee. The information in the Law Library comes in many formats including the traditional books and journals, microforms, audiovisuals, and electronic formats such as on-line and CD-ROM computer databases.

Funding for the Law Library continues to improve. Acquisition funding has again increased by 14 percent allowing for increased expenditures for new titles. Funding has also been provided for additional equipment needed to access information in new electronic formats. Some of these funds will be used to add CD-ROM tower systems to our existing computer lab network. This will give students access to several new databases such as Tennessee Law on Disk, as well as increased access to Legal-Trac and Index to Legal Periodicals.

Funding increases have also allowed the Law Library to expand the staff, resulting in improved services for the users of the library. The new reference librarian position, described in the last annual report, has been filled. Two additional positions were approved this year. The first, a cataloger, will shorten the time needed to classify, catalog, and process materials for the collection as well as help in preparation for installation of our new on-line public access catalog. The second position, a computer, electronic services and networking manager, will help in the crucial planning and implementation for the electronic library envisioned for the new College of Law building.

The five-year comparison chart illustrates current collection growth and acquisition expenditures. The Law Library now contains 365,474 volumes and microform volume equivalents. This is a 5.7 percent increase over the past year and a 17.1 percent increase over the past five years.

The Law Library is on the threshold of a new era. Exciting technological changes are occurring in the methods used to provide legal information services. The new building addition will provide the space and technical support necessary to implement these changes. The faculty and staff have devoted their time, energies, and talents, over the past year, to the planning process for the new facility. Many hours have been spent defining and refining space descriptions for each function in the new Law Library. Working closely with the project architects, they have made every effort to create a state-of-the-art legal resource center, designed to meet the information needs of its various user groups.

CAREER SERVICES

he focus of career services offices has begun to change nationwide, and Tennessee Law is no exception. A downturn in the legal employment market has prompted career services professionals to reassess the role they should play in a student's legal education, as well as in the educational mission of the law school at large.

The continuing decline in hiring by law firms, government agencies and public interest organizations is precipitating changes in staff assistance to students as well as alumni. Emphasis is moving from the role of "job broker" (providing notices of job listings and on-campus interviewing opportunities) to one of education regarding the versatility of the law degree and the many professional arenas in which it may be utilized. Efforts are to change the image and capacities of career services offices to that of a well-equipped resource center where students not only can discover what they would really like to do with a law degree, but also learn how to make contacts and build networks for doing so.

To that end, a new position has been created in the UT Law Career Services office this year for a resource specialist whose charge is to concentrate her efforts in acquiring, organizing and communicating information regarding traditional and non-traditional legal careers, fellowships and postgraduate opportunities, standard bar requirements for individual states and the patent bar exam, and the like. Materials on-hand have been reorganized, catalogued and made more accessible. New acquisitions have included such titles as the Business Lawyer's Handbook, The Legal Job Interview, The Trial Lawyers, The 110 Biggest Mistakes Job Hunters Make, Job Strategies for People With Disabilities, and the Sports Resource Directory. Special efforts to expand materials on alternatives to the traditional practice of law have added such titles as What Can You Do With A Law Degree, Life After Law: Second Careers for Lawyers, Complete Guide to Public Employment, and Lawyers Lives Out of Control: A Quality of Life Handbook.

Plans are underway as well to publish a series of companion booklets to our annual picturebook of students, Lawyers of the Future, to be entitled Lawyers of the Present. Profiling the careers of selected alumni/ae, four editions are planned to concentrate on alternatives to the traditional practice of law, corporate or in-house counsel positions, public interest/government, and the many variations of traditional law firm practice. Participants will be invited to contribute first-person narratives describing their career paths since graduation, the satisfactions and frustrations of their work, and any advice for students about to begin a similar career. Lawyers of the Present will become a reality in late 1993 with the first volume featuring alternatives to the traditional practice of law.

Computer terminals for the on-line, legal databases Lexis and Westlaw were added to Career Services. Students use the databases to search for the most up-to-date information on law firms, government agencies, public interest organizations and corporations throughout the world. Sample career searches may include any or all of the following: job openings and hiring criteria; a list of alumni in a certain city; salary information; and specific case law the employer has litigated.

The Alumni Advisory Council formed its first Career Services Committee to assist the law school in strengthening its career services program by providing information from the practitioner's perspective about the changing legal job market and hiring cycles. Planning began for an initial project to build a network of alumni/ae who are willing to give several hours a year by phone or personal interview to assist our graduates in the transition from academics to the practice of law.

In keeping with a nationwide re-emphasis on pro bono efforts and to expand student opportunities, Career Services initiated a volunteer summer clerkship program. More than 25 first- and second-year students gave their time and legal talents to judges, government agencies and public interest organizations in Tennessee and the Southeast.

EMPLOYMENT STATISTICS FOR THE CLASS OF 1992

Within nine months of graduation, 91 percent of the members of the Class of 1992, whose employment status was known, had accepted employment. This compares nationally to 83.5 percent employment for all 1992 law school graduates whose employment status was known, and to 90 percent employment for the UT Class of 1991. (National statistics were obtained from the Class of 1992 Employment and Salary Survey, published by the National Association for Law Placement, Washington, DC)

After nine months, 7 percent of the class reported that they were unemployed and seeking work, up slightly from 5 percent of the class of 1991. Almost 13 percent of 1992 graduates across the country reported being unemployed and seeking work.

Sixty-four percent of employed graduates chose to enter full-time, private practice, compared to 59 percent nationally and to 69 percent of the class of 1991. Ten percent gained employment through business and industry, 24 percent chose to work in a government-related position, and less than one percent each accepted employment in public interest and academic fields.

Sixty-one percent of the 136 graduates who were employed full-time provided salary information, revealing a range of $22,500 to $70,000. The annual average salary of $37,582 reported for all locations and all employment categories was down from $38,587 for the class of 1991. This compares to an annual average salary nationwide for the class of 1992 of $42,600, down from $44,300 for the class of 1991. The median salary for UT's class of 1992 was $33,000, compared to $36,000 nationally. Both median figures were down from $35,000 for UT's class of 1991 and $40,000 nationally for the class of 1991.

The University of Tennessee, Knoxville does not discriminate on the basis of race, sex, color, religion, national origin, age, handicap, or veteran status in provision of educational opportunities or employment opportunities and benefits. UT Knoxville does not discriminate on the basis of sex or handicap in its educational programs or activities, pursuant to requirements of Title IX of the Educational Amendments of 1972, Public Law 92-318, and Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, Public Law 93-112, and the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990, Public Law 101-336, respectively. This policy extends to both employment by and admission to the University. Inquiries concerning Title IX, Section 504, and the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990 should be directed to the Office of Affirmative Action, The University of Tennessee, 403-C Andy Holt Tower, Knoxville, Tennessee 37996-0144; or telephone (615)974-2498. Charges of violation of the above policy should also be directed to the Office of Affirmative Action.
