Honorable Judge Lane,

I am a former employee of American Airlines, hired in 1960, when the company had just a bit over 16000 employees. Mr C. R. Smith, was the president of the company then and he visited the stations of the company, I remember lining up to shake his hands. He considered us employees, an asset of the company, and said so to us in his visits. I was in my early twenties when hired, and aircraft maintenance, being a 7 days 24 hour operation, I spent well over ten years on the midnight shift. I gave the best years of my life to this Company, because it seemed that everyone got ahead, by working by the rules of the company and seniority . The company took care of those who spent the better part of their life working for them, in my case over 42 years.

I understand that the Company is facing stiff competition, constantly raising fuel prices, because I also invested in this company by buying their common stock, which by the way lost about 90% of their value, after their Bankruptcy filing. American Airlines had some reserves & credit, so they have managed to secure large purchases of new airplanes from two of the largest aircraft manufactures. We, and all the employees, of the company, wish that the Company succeed. This will be not be easy, if the Company totally disregards employee moral, and throw retirees, future retirees overboard.

Please do not let this company just simply walk away from their obligations.

Sincerely yours,

Zsolt Carl Petroczy
